

API - The World Bank

Research proposal

Marian Petruk

April 7 2017

It is proposed to use the statistical data available from the World Bank to analyse and compare the development of two countries, Ukraine and Poland, from the middle of the 1990ths to the present time.

The idea is that the two countries were at a comparable level at mid 1990ths and then followed different ways in development. The main fields for comparison would be Economy and Social changes. The goal is to reveal the differences in evolution and to find relations between these data and historical events through the given time.

If the results would be worth presenting, in addition to the text report, it could be possible to create a website. The website may contain examples, basic means for analysis, description and visualisation of the obtained data.
